The Mexican war which followed, politically was not worse than our Asiatic wars, but about as bad. It was nevertheless entered into (as I understand) by a breach of the constitution, and against the utmost effort of all that party of the North which is now in power; and it aimed avowedly at the extension of slavery, which cannot be said of us, in our worst wickedness. Victorious in this war, the South endeavoured, but failed in the endeavour, to establish slavery in California. After this came the buccaneering attacks on Cuba and Nicaragua, the ferocious marauding against Kansas, also the Ostend congress of the American ministers in Europe, which but a few years back was accepted by all England as nothing short of an apotheosis...
